The original MTRA WWTP constructed in the 1970's was replaced with a new WWTP constructed in 2007. The one year certification for the WWTP was submitted on February 14, 2008. As part of the new WWTP, the HCPN organization recognized the benefits of incorporating nutrient based limits for total nitrogen (8 mg/L) and total phosphorus (1 mg/L) in the facility even though the design annual average flow is 0.23 million gallons per day, which currently exempts it from such treatment levels, as stipulated by the Chesapeake Bay Tributary Strategy. Additionally a long term desire to reuse a portion of treated WWTP effluent in selected locations at Penn National was able to be achieved by the new WWTP utilizing a combination of an Aqua-Aerobic SBR facility, cloth media disk filter system, chlorination/dechlorination, and supplemental monitoring with auxiliary chlorination areas.

One year after the 2008 initial startup of the water reuse facility, the volume of reused water is approximately 25% of the total WWTP flow. The reuse water is of such clarity and quality that a dye is injected into some piping so that the reclaimed water can be readily recognized. Reuse of the WWTP effluent has also been appreciated by local residents because it decreases demand on the local groundwater table.
